Kings Cross is a line of golf apparel inspired by golf's rich, centuries-old history. Originating in Europe and most strongly rooted in Scotland, folklore has it that players dressed in kilts to reflect their heritage. By the mid-20th century, knickers and sweater vests had become the transatlantic signature golf outfit. Honoring the evolution of golf fashion, the Kings Cross mission is to create a clothing line that respects the integrity of traditional golf style, while giving it a fresh, fun spin.

Plus fours are breeches or trousers that extend four inches below the knee - four inches longer than traditional knickerbockers. Associated with sporting and golf attire since the 1860s, the additional four inches of length allows for more freedom of movement than traditional knickerbockers. A fashionably daring and confident style similar to that of the roaring 20s, plus fours were introduced to the US by Edward, Prince of Wales in the 1920s. Decades later, they became prominent again when Payne Stewart wore them on the PGA Tour. It is not uncommon to see plus fours paired with argyle socks and sweaters, neckties or dress shirts.
